Effectiveness of leadership training in medical students: a systematic review of evidence

Oscar Lyons
Research Fellow, South Auckland Clinical Campus and House Officer, CMDHB

Oscar is Rhodes Scholar for 2016, and his key interests include leadership, teamwork, jazz and judo. He will present the results of a systematic review of the evidence for the effectiveness of leadership training that goes beyond personal reactions.

How does person-centred care differ from patient-centred care?

Assoc. Prof. Stephen Buetow
Department of General Practice and Primary Health Care, University of Auckland

Raising concerns about a patient-centred ethics of principle-governed action for patient welfare and population health, I will suggest a need for person-centred care. I will suggest defining values of person-centred care that distinguish this practice model from values of patient-centred care. I will suggest that the values of person-centred medicine link to virtues that dispose patients and clinicians, as moral equals, to balance their welfare, by doing the right things for the right reasons, and to flourish.

12 noon – 12.30pm – light lunch and networking
12.30 – 1.30 – Seminar presentations
